JOHN J. PEOLI.

“JOHN J. PEOLI, an artist of this city, died of pneumonia at Sagua la Grande, Cuba, on July 8th. Mr. Peoli was born in New York on October 1, 1825, and shortly afterward moved to Havana with his parents. He began his art studies in the Royal Academy of San Alejandro. His proficiency gained him the prize by which he was entitled to a scholarship in Rome, where he studied for eight years under Minardi, finishing at Madrid and at Paris. Returning to Cuba he assumed charge of the chair of art in the Empresa School, Matanzas. He returned with his family to this city in 1861. One of his latest works was a portrait of Venezuela's hero, General Paez, and at the time of his death a partly finished life-size portrait of General Sickles was on his easel.

“The collection of water-colors, etchings, and engravings which Mr. Peoli had gathered was one of the finest in the United States. His home in New York was at No. 317 West Fifty-eighth Street, and his summer home at Sandy Hill, on the Hudson. He left New York on June 6th with one son to settle his Estate Resulta, in Cuba. He leaves a widow, four sons, and two daughters.”—“Obituary” from the New York Herald, July 17, 1893.

Mr. Peoli was the son of natives of the city of Caraccas, Venezuela. The family were originally from Corsica. At the age of three years he was taken by his parents to Havana, and there, at the age of twelve, began the study of art. Two years later he won the first prize at the Royal Academy, which entitled him to a scholarship in Rome, Italy, where he studied during a period of eight years. The work which gained him the scholarship was a portrait of himself in black and white crayon, and is now shown with others of his works. Several years more were passed in arduous study in France and Spain. In Madrid he painted portraits of the Royal Infanta Doña Josefa de Borbon, the Royal Infante Don Enrique de Borbon, and of Don Jose Güel y Renté (husband of the above-mentioned Infanta), and several others of the royal family. A portrait of the noted General Prim had been commenced, but the artist's sudden recall to Cuba prevented its completion. In one of the churches of Madrid is a Madonna painted by the artist. On his return to Havana, in competitive exhibition two of his paintings were awarded a silver medal—highest prize—to each. He painted many portraits of the principal men of the island, and won in marriage Doña Antonia Alfonso y Madan. In 1864 he came to the United States and made New York City his home.

In Rome he enjoyed the friendship of many prominent artists. Among them were P. Clavé, for many years director of the Academy of Fine Arts in the city of Mexico; Philip Koelman, Ponciano Ponzano; R. Balze, who was then and is still employed by the French government on copies of noted Italian paintings. While in Italy he fought under Garibaldi in the ranks of the Art Students' League, at the time of the French invasion.

His earliest "collecting" of art dates from his eighteenth year, prompted, doubtless, by the inheritance of some old paintings, of which a few are in this collection. His continuous study of the Old Masters quickened his perception, and formed for him an artistic taste for the good and worthy, which is shown in the perfect selection he has made for his collection; his fluency in modern languages aided him greatly in the formation of a library of references which is replete with the literature of art and artistic works.

He practised in all the methods of oils and water-colors. He lithographed and etched, and was thoroughly conversant with all kinds and processes of engraving on wood and metal, and he also modelled in clay. Many of the specimens catalogued, rare and most valuable, were purchased from celebrated collections and are stamped with their well-known "marks," which to collectors add greatly to the value of engravings and "Old Masters' Drawings."

The wealth of the collection may be indicated partly in stating that 137 engravers of note, their pupils and followers, are represented, beside others chronologically valuable. Thus there are in numbers, viz.: Altdorfer, 25; Berghem, 40; Cantarini, 50; Albert Dürer, 150; Goltzius, 35; Lucas Van Leyden, 50; Marc Antonio, 60; Van Ostade, 75; Raphael Morghen, 40; Rembrandt, 134; Ribera, 50, etc., etc., as per catalogue.

In drawings the same list will nearly hold good: Boucher, Dürer, Goltzius, L. Van Leyden, Raphael, Paul Veronese, Van Dyck,

Rubens, Rosa Bonheur, Calame, Corot, Delacroix, Diaz, Goya, Jacque, Horace Vernet, Ary Scheffer, Pils, and others.

In water-colors, about 275 in number, many are by most eminent masters.

In oils : Bassan, Corot, Diaz, Etty, Fragonard, Raphael, Pils, Copley, Melby, Ribera, Verboeckhoven, and others.

The collection is worth the attention of connoisseurs whether for private purchase or as donations to public museums, which sadly need such material as is here offered.

The mark  used by Mr. Peoli has been stamped on all the engravings, drawings, and water-colors.

After his studies in Rome he went to the East during the Crimean War and made studies for many of his prominent pictures. His "Battle of Almar" (1861) was purchased for the Minister of State. The four paintings in the vault over the great staircase in the new Opera House in Paris are by Pils. Many of his studies for this work are in this collection.

"An artist, he possessed all the beautiful qualities, the genius, the warmth, the disinterestedness. French he was also, by his eminent qualities as a designer; his sketching was bold, spirituelle, very skillful in lightness, and full of freedom. He never made merchandise of his art, or speculated on his talents. A French painter, his talent had the grand national qualities—simplicity, neatness, brilliancy."—L. Clement de Ris, Gazette des Beaux Arts.
